Career Services statistics for Class of 2001

Less than a year after graduation, 99 percent of qualified graduates had found a job or were pursuing advanced degrees.

Geography

Many of our 2001 graduates choose to work in New York City, Buffalo, Rochester, and other locales in New York State. Others find work in cities and towns throughout the United States (there is a particular concentration in Washington, D.C.), as well as abroad.

In the Class of 2001, 19 percent of the class found employment outside New York State – up 2 percent from last year.

Within the state of New York, the class of 2001 found employment in these areas:

Albany	1 %
Buffalo	59 %	████████████████████
New York City	14 %	████
Rochester	14 %	████
Syracuse	2 %
Other	10%	█

Practice areas

Consistent with most law schools, 55 percent of the 2001 graduates went into private practice. Another 16 percent of that class joined business enterprises. The success of the 2001 UB Law graduates in the public sector is noteworthy: About 5 percent were employed in legal services, legal aid or other not-for-profit organizations. In addition more than 16 percent of these graduates serve the public through government employment, military or judicial employment, including 4 percent in judicial clerkships.

“UB Law alumni play a crucial role in the placement success of our graduates. Besides hiring our new graduates, they offer much-needed advice, encouragement and networking help. In these days of economic uncertainty, we rely heavily on the support and participation of the law alumni in our Career Services efforts.”

— Lisa M. Patterson
 Associate Dean for Career Services

Salaries

Even factoring in the large number of our graduates in public practice, the median starting salary for 2001 graduates was $52,855. Starting salaries ranged to a high of $135,000. When compared to the costs of attending UB Law, the return on investment is the best in New York State.
