10-1-2005

After Katrina: Tales of the Storm, from Houston and Buffalo

UB Law Forum

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.law.buffalo.edu/ub_law_forum

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.law.buffalo.edu/ub_law_forum/vol18/iss1/9

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Alumni Publications at Digital Commons @ University at Buffalo School of Law. It has been accepted for inclusion in UB Law Forum by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ University at Buffalo School of Law. For more information, please contact lawscholar@buffalo.edu.
like a hurricane coursing across open water, sometimes life takes a sudden turn.

For the residents of New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, that reality became unavoidably true on the weekend of Aug. 26 to 28. As Hurricane Katrina bore down on the below-sea-level city, and those who could evacuate hit the road, residents knew that their lives would be forever altered by the power of wind and water.

Barbara Ryniker Evans ’76

A UB Law School alumna who learned that lesson, Evans, a partner in the downtown New Orleans law firm Evans, Schnabel & Associates, fled with her family as the Category 4 hurricane approached. They have established themselves in Houston while the city of New Orleans continues to be closed indefinitely.

“The storm has presented challenges on a whole variety of levels,” Evans said. “In the long term, the profession will remain viable, but there are a lot of short-term challenges.” The caseload is now full of labor and unemployment work as the Gulf Coast feels the economic brunt of the storm.

The state of Texas, she said, has granted displaced attorneys provisional admission to the Texas bar through May, and she may seek permanent admission to that bar. And the dislocation may be opening up new opportunities for the firm. “Most of us feel we will continue to have a business presence here in Texas,” Evans said.

She has lived in New Orleans for 25 years, though, so the shock and awe of a city so deeply disrupted is great. “It was a very, very difficult thing for us to see our city on fire and flooded,” she said. “We were safe, but there was nothing we could do to help.”

“But you count your blessings. We are all well, and we have received a tremendous amount of support from our friends. I have heard from my colleagues at UB, many of whom I have not heard from in years, and a lot of professional colleagues, too.

“There are a lot of pluses as well as the negatives. We have all just banded together to help one another and make the best we can of the situation in which we find ourselves, which is one of the benefits of having a family.”

Among those displaced by the storm damage were law students from Loyola University New Orleans and Tulane University, also in New Orleans. Three enrolled in UB Law School as visiting students for the fall semester: Michelle Schwach, an Ambler native; Peter Bodman, from Niagara Falls, and Sara Johnson, a native of Williamsport.

The three are among as many as 100,000 students at 30 institutions whose educational plans were disrupted by Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath.

Schwach had completed orientation and a week of classes when she got a call from a family friend in New Orleans on Aug. 26, a day before the National Hurricane Center extended a hurricane watch for Louisiana.

“She said, ‘This looks like it is going to be a bad storm, Michelle,’” said Schwach. “I just had a bad feeling about it. I said, I am just going to leave.’”

She took a Saturday afternoon flight back to Buffalo, then followed the storm over the next week from her family’s Ambler home. “Watching everything unfold was brutal for me,” she said. “The worst part of it was watching the aftermath. And every day it got worse. I can’t believe it. I still cannot believe it.”

Johnson traveled to Austin, Texas, then flew home to Buffalo. What has become of the belongings in her second-floor apartment, she is not sure. Though she has been told that her refrigerator filled her neighborhood, online satellite pictures show less damage — at least on the surface.

“The mold grows so fast you would never believe it,” she said. Then there are the refrigerators left full of food by people who have found maggots three feet deep,” she said.

The least of her problems was finding a law school to attend for the semester. “I e-mailed Dean Melinda Saran on Friday night and had an answer back by Saturday morning. I arrived in Buffalo and registered for classes all on the Tuesday the semester started.”

Tulane is planning a normal spring semester, and Johnson plans to return there in January. Looking toward that day, she said, “My main concern is, where am I going to live?”

At Loyola announced Sept. 4 that it would be closed until January. Schwach began looking for another law school, where she could study for the fall semester. When she contacted UB Law, Schwach, a 2005 UB graduate whose father, Lawrence, is a 1965 alumnus of the Law School, was able to reserve a spot. “I worked out really, really well,” she said. “I think it has been absolutely incred-

The storm has presented challenges on a whole variety of levels... The commercial litigation that we do has come to a halt. The state courthouse in New Orleans remained shuttered. There is a question about the integrity of the official records.”
AFTERTHSTORM

Tales of the storm, from Houston and Buffalo

Like a hurricane coursing across open water, sometimes life takes a sudden turn.

For the residents of New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, that reality became unavoidably true on the weekend of Aug. 26 to 28. As Hurricane Katrina bore down on the below-sea-level city, and those who could evacuate hit the road, residents knew that their lives would be forever altered by the power of wind and water.

Barbara Ryniker Evans ’76

17-year-old son has now enrolled in a Houston high school for his senior year, after New Orleans schools were closed by storm damage. (They also have a 13-year-old daughter who is a student at Amherst College in Massachusetts.

The Evanses’ uptown New Orleans neighborhood, “in a beautiful part of the city that has a lot of 19th and 18th century houses and a lot of large oak trees,” was unaffected by severe flooding, but suffered a tremendous amount of wind and damage from trees. Our neighborhood is very much as it was, with the exception of debris. Their law partner’s house, however, was flooded.

Throughout the city, she said, houses sport large blue tarps on their roofs, concealing storm damage. It is difficult to find qualified workers to do cleanup and repair work, given the great need and the fact that many New Orleans residents remain evacuated.

Professionally, many of her law firm’s usual clients – individuals and business interests in Louisiana – have suffered major damage: “The legal profession is going to change as a result of the significant economic changes that have been wrought by the storm.” Evans said. “In the long term, the profession will remain viable, but there are a lot of short-term challenges. The caseload is now full of labor and unemployment work as the Gulf Coast feels the economic brunt of the storm.

The state of Texas, she said, has granted displaced attorneys provisional admission to the Texas bar through May, and she may seek permanent admission to that bar. And the dislocation may be opening up new opportunities for the firm. “Most of us feel we will continue to have a business presence here in Texas,” Evans said.

She has lived in New Orleans for 23 years, though, so the shock and awe of a city so deeply disrupted is great. “It was a very, very difficult thing for us to see our city on fire and flooded,” she said. “We were safe, but there was nothing we could do to help.”

“But you count your blessings. We are all well, and we have received a tremendous amount of support from our friends. I have heard from my colleagues at UB, many of whom I have not heard from in years, and a lot of professional colleagues, too.

“There are a lot of phases as well as the negatives. We have all just banded together to help one another and make the best we can of the situation in which we find ourselves, which is one of the benefits of having a family.

Among those displaced by the storm damage were law students from Loyola University New Orleans and Tulane University, also in New Orleans. Three enrolled in UB Law School as visiting students for the fall semester: Michelle Schwan, an Amherst native; Peter Bodman, from Niagara Falls; and Sara Johnson, a native of Williamsport.

The three are among as many as 100,000 students at 30 institutions whose educational plans were disrupted by Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath.

Schwach had completed orientation and a week of classes when she got a call from a family friend in New Orleans on Aug. 26, a day before the National Hurricane Center extended a hurricane watch for Louisiana. “She said, ‘This looks like it is going to be a bad storm, Michelle,’” said Schwach. “I just had a bad feeling about it. I said, ‘I am just going to leave.’”

She took a Saturday afternoon flight back to Buffalo, then followed the storm over the next week from her family’s Amherst home. “Watching everything unfold was brutal for me,” she said. “The worst part of it was watching the aftermath. And every day it got worse. I can’t believe it. I still cannot believe it.”

The least of her problems was finding a home to attend for the semester. “I emailed Dean Melissa Saran on Friday night and had an answer back by Saturday morning,” she said. “And registered for classes all on the Tuesday the semester started.”

Tulane is planning a normal spring semester, and Johnson plans to return there in January. Looking toward that day, she said, “My main concern is, where am I going to live?”

New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina

Professional, many of her law firm’s usual clients – individuals and business interests in Louisiana – have suffered major damage: “The legal profession is going to change as a result of the significant economic changes that have been wrought by the storm,” Evans said. “In the long term, the profession will remain viable, but there are a lot of short-term challenges. The caseload is now full of labor and unemployment work as the Gulf Coast feels the economic brunt of the storm.

The state of Texas, she said, has granted displaced attorneys provisional admission to the Texas bar through May, and she may seek permanent admission to that bar. And the dislocation may be opening up new opportunities for the firm. “Most of us feel we will continue to have a business presence here in Texas,” Evans said.

She has lived in New Orleans for 23 years, though, so the shock and awe of a city so deeply disrupted is great. “It was a very, very difficult thing for us to see our city on fire and flooded,” she said. “We were safe, but there was nothing we could do to help.”

“But you count your blessings. We are all well, and we have received a tremendous amount of support from our friends. I have heard from my colleagues at UB, many of whom I have not heard from in years, and a lot of professional colleagues, too.

“There are a lot of phases as well as the negatives. We have all just banded together to help one another and make the best we can of the situation in which we find ourselves, which is one of the benefits of having a family.

Among those displaced by the storm damage were law students from Loyola University New Orleans and Tulane University, also in New Orleans. Three enrolled in UB Law School as visiting students for the fall semester: Michelle Schwan, an Amherst native; Peter Bodman, from Niagara Falls; and Sara Johnson, a native of Williamsport.

The three are among as many as 100,000 students at 30 institutions whose educational plans were disrupted by Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath.

Schwach had completed orientation and a week of classes when she got a call from a family friend in New Orleans on Aug. 26, a day before the National Hurricane Center extended a hurricane watch for Louisiana. “She said, ‘This looks like it is going to be a bad storm, Michelle,’” said Schwach. “I just had a bad feeling about it. I said, ‘I am just going to leave.’”

She took a Saturday afternoon flight back to Buffalo, then followed the storm over the next week from her family’s Amherst home. “Watching everything unfold was brutal for me,” she said. “The worst part of it was watching the aftermath. And every day it got worse. I can’t believe it. I still cannot believe it.”

The least of her problems was finding a home to attend for the semester. “I emailed Dean Melissa Saran on Friday night and had an answer back by Saturday morning. I arrived in Buffalo and registered for classes all on the Tuesday the semester started.”

Tulane is planning a normal spring semester, and Johnson plans to return there in January. Looking toward that day, she said, “My main concern is, where am I going to live?”

New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina