Coming Soon: Scholar of Religion Joins UB Law Faculty, but Not Quite Yet

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.law.buffalo.edu/ub_law_forum

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.law.buffalo.edu/ub_law_forum/vol19/iss1/39

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Alumni Publications at Digital Commons @ University at Buffalo School of Law. It has been accepted for inclusion in UB Law Forum by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ University at Buffalo School of Law. For more information, please contact lawscholar@buffalo.edu.
New assistant professor focuses on intellectual property law

FROM COURTROOM TO CLASSROOM

S ometimes good things come in twos. That has proved to be the case for UB Law School’s newest faculty member, Winnifred Fallers Sullivan, a scholar of religion and public life. No sooner had she been offered the Buffalo teaching position than the news came that she had won a spot in the prestigious National Humanities Center fellowship program in North Carolina. As a result, while she has joined the UB Law faculty, she is spending the 2006-07 academic year in Research Triangle Park, N.C., doing research and working on two books.

Sullivan, a Chicago native, most recently has held teaching and administrative positions at the University of Chicago Divinity School, where she earned a doctoral degree. Her J.D. is from the University of Chicago Law School.

“Religion and law today speak in languages largely opaque to each other,” she adds, and Sullivan’s work seeks to bridge that gap – a vital task in an age of rising religious pluralism in the United States and worldwide. “This,” she said, “is an unusual law school that is open to interdisciplinary conversation.”

B Law School’s program in intellectual property law is being bolstered with the addition of Associate Professor Mark Bartholomew, who comes to Buffalo from the Sonoma County Counsel’s Office in Santa Rosa, Calif.

Bartholomew, whose published articles range beyond IP to such topics as the history of legal education and employment discrimination, is a 2000 graduate of Yale Law School, where he was senior editor of the Yale Law Journal and editor of the Yale Journal of Law & Humanities.

The University and UB Law, he said, is a great place to be. “It is great to have all these other smart, very talented people to bounce ideas off of,” he said, “and the whole university full of people to bounce ideas off of.” And coming full time to an academic setting, Bartholomew said, gives him “more time to explore things in more detail. It is nice to have the time for my job now,” rather than an avocation on the side of a legal practice.

After law school, Bartholomew clerked for a federal judge in Pasadena, Calif., and handled intellectual property, securities, consumer fraud, bankruptcy and probate cases for a midsize San Francisco law firm. In the Sonoma County Counsel’s Office, he was a litigator, especially in cases where the county was arguing for the establishment of conservatorships for disabled persons.

Bartholomew’s legal research has come to focus on trademarks, patents and other aspects of intellectual property law, especially as it relates to cyberspace. A forthcoming piece in the Oklahoma Law Review deals with a trademark analysis of search engine advertising. “There is a revolution now in copyright law,” he said, “with the prevalence of digital imaging and the Internet. Anybody who wants to download a song has to deal with that.”

UB Law now offers a concentration in IP law. Bartholomew will join Professor Robert J. Berlin as a specialist in the field. There are preliminary plans, Bartholomew said, to implement a patent law clinic that would work with the University’s technology transfer office, which manages the commercialization of technology developed at the school. “It is a place where we can try a lot of new approaches,” he said. “We can tailor it to students. We do not have to follow a set pattern.”

Bartholomew is teaching a fall-semester course in Trademarks and Unfair Competition, and in the spring will teach a copyright course and a seminar on legal and cultural issues in cyberspace.

Bartholomew grew up in South Bend, Ind., where both his parents were educators; his father was a professor at the local campus of Indiana University. “I am just very interested in education in general. I think I am hard-wired to see that as important,” he said. He got a taste of Western New York during his undergraduate work at Cornell University, in Ithaca.

His wife, Christine, is also a lawyer; she telecommutes for her job doing anti-trust work for a California law firm. She also will teach a class in anti-trust law at UB Law School in the spring semester.

“I like the interdisciplinary focus here,” he said. “It is fun to hear what somebody else is working on. And it is really nice to have the Baldy Center in-house. They really know people around the school – you just have to send an e-mail or call them, and they will put you in touch with someone who shares your academic interests.”

Faculty

Professor Winnifred Fallers Sullivan.

COMING SOON

Scholar of religion joins UB Law faculty, but not quite yet