A Summer in the Public Interest

UB Law Forum

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.law.buffalo.edu/ub_law_forum

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.law.buffalo.edu/ub_law_forum/vol29/iss1/13

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Alumni Publications at Digital Commons @ University at Buffalo School of Law. It has been accepted for inclusion in UB Law Forum by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ University at Buffalo School of Law. For more information, please contact lawscholar@buffalo.edu.
A summer in the public interest

Carrying on a proud SUNY Buffalo tradition of working in the public interest, nearly two dozen students invested their summer in government and nonprofit work. Many did so with the support of the Buffalo Public Interest Law Program, which awards grants to support students who work unpaid internships.

Their jobs and the experiences they had range widely, but they report one common thread: They remain committed to using the law as an instrument of seeking justice and improving lives.

Among those whose work was supported by BPILP:

At the New Jersey attorney general’s office, Amanda Barba ’15 helped represent the Division of Child Protection and Permanency.

Much of her summer, she says, was spent drafting a 65-page responding brief for an appeal of a case in which a mother’s parental rights were terminated.”I had to review the entire case record, all the trial transcripts and all this documentation that the division has gathered since before the parents even had the child,” she says.

“People are victims of circumstance sometimes, and mental illness seems to be an increasing problem in prisons,” Yager says. “Their stories are heart-breaking.”

Andrew DeMasters ’16 was in Washington, D.C., with the Office of General Counsel of the federal Department of Homeland Security. There he worked on pre-trial litigation in labor and employment law, cases involving Homeland Security workers who claim employment issues such as age or sex discrimination or a hostile work environment.

As well, he says, he got to experience “what it’s like to have the United States government as your client. That’s a huge responsibility, but at the end of the day, what you did meant something.”

Kelly Barrett ’15 spent her 2L summer in the government affairs office of the Trevor Project, a national organization that provides crisis intervention and suicide prevention to LGBT young people.

Partly, she says, the work involved advocacy—reading the Federal Register to look for government actions that would affect gay and lesbian youths, and submitting comments on the Trevor Project’s behalf. There was also a major research project looking at how the religious exemption in Title IX has been applied in light of the Supreme Court’s Hobby Lobby decision.

“I have learned more this summer than I have ever learned in any position in the past,” Barrett says. “I spent probably half the week out of the office, meeting with other organizations, going to Congress, attending White House briefings, networking with tons of people and learning a lot about advocacy and policy work. This has been the most incredible experience of my professional life.”